A Maginot Line in the Sky: International Perspectives on Ballistic Missile Defense

Edited by David Krieger and Carah Ong

This book brings together the views of eighteen contributors of different nationalities, including Americans, on the proposed US Ballistic Missile Defense plans. These perspectives should be included in any intelligent discussion of whether or not the US should proceed with development and deployment of missile defense systems.

“Every person should read this book to understand the utter folly of the missile defense plans being pursued by the United States government.”

Gerry Spence
Author and Trial Lawyer

“This volume is a treasury of lucid cogent views which will enlighten and inform the decision makers and decision molders concerning aspects of a missile defense system which heretofore have been largely ignored and glossed over.”

Rear Admiral Gene R. La Rocque
USN (Ret.)
Chairman Emeritus,
Center for Defense Information

“A remarkable work, combining extensive and relevant fact with valid opinion.”

Admiral Noel Gayler
USN (Ret.)
Former Commander-in-Chief
US Pacific Command

“I think no reasonable person can read these essays without concluding that the missile defense project menaces our national security and erodes our reputation as a global leader.”

Richard Falk, J.S.D.
Milbank Professor of International Law and Practice
Princeton University
